

Terrass" Hotel

Christophe Bielsa

Magical views over the city make this swish Montmartre hotel bar the ideal spot for a romantic aperitif.

For a night at the top – both literally and figuratively – the bar of Montmartre's Terrass" hotel is exceptional even by Paris's standards. Yes, it's had a swanky, contemporary new makeover, mixes expensive cocktails, and serves an above-average menu to its extremely well-heeled clientele in an atmosphere of velvet-lined chic. That's all very nice, but can be found in endless permutations across the city. But nowhere else has this view. From the outdoor terrace to the window tables, the bar takes in the ranks of distinguished gravestones of the Cimetière de Montmartre below, swivelling up over a sea of undulating grey rooftops to the Eiffel Tower on the far left bank of the city, out towards the grassy hills of the Bois du Boulogne, while over your shoulder looms the sugary dome of the Sacré-Coeur. Even a properly blasé Parisian might take a minute up here to raise their glass to the ville lumière.
